National Symbol

The silver fern is becoming increasingly recognised overseas as the national symbol of New Zealand.

It was originally adopted by the New Zealand Native Rugby Team which visited England in 1888 and has since formed part of the uniform (or badge) of successive representative sporting teams. From the early 1900s, the fern leaf has been used as a trademark for meat and dairy exports. On 18 May 1908 to mark the attainment of Dominion status, the Secretary of State for Colonies approved the New Zealand Government's proposal to substitute a wreath of fern leaves for the laurel wreath on the Governor's Ensign. This usage also continued until about 1935.

The fern leaf has been used as a distinguishing badge for New Zealand military formations, particularly during the Second World War, and was also used to mark the graves of New Zealand servicemen in overseas countries. In the most recent revision (1963) of the New Zealand Coat of Arms, two fern leaves provide a base for the supporters to stand upon.

There is no question that the Silver Fern is the most recognised symbol of New Zealand. For over a century, the Silver Fern has been the emblem of our sports men and women. The Silver Fern is used extensively as a symbol by Government, tourism, trade organisations and commercial brands.

The Silver Fern says "New Zealand".

KORU

In Maori design, the Koru has a dual meaning. It is commonly used in Maori art as a symbol of creation.

It is also said to represent new life and in business, new beginnings and the strengthening of existing relationships.

Literally speaking, the baby fern frond slowly unwinds over its adolescent life as it grows into a mature frond. It then opens into a brand-new leaf on the silver fern plant where it ages and then dies. This is the fern fronds life cycle.

HEI MATAU

The new age understanding of the design is that it represents strength, good luck, and safe travel across water. The fish-hook shape of the hei matau finds its origins in Māori legend, which holds that the North Island of New Zealand was once a huge fish that was caught by the great mariner Maui using only a woven line and a hook made from the jawbone of his grandmother. The fish hook denotes the importance of fishing to the Maori people of New Zealand, and their strong relationship to Tangaroa, the god of the sea.

WAKA HUIA

The Waka Huia (Feather Box) was the treasure box of a chief or a family group.

Waka Huia were originally used for holding ceremonial items or valued treasures and the long tail feathers of the Huia bird. The tail feathers were used to adorn the hair of Maori chiefs - hence this is where the name is derived from.

Combs for the hair, tiki, greenstone and bone ornaments, valued feathers and other small treasures were all retained in the papahou under a very special tapu. The box was suspended from a rafter of a chief's sleeping hut or kept in one of those small whatu rangi upheld by a single pole of considerable length.

POHUTUKAWA PORCELAIN DIPPING BOWLS

This native tree grows around New Zealand's coasts. It is able to withstand salt-laden winds and drought and can successfully gain a foothold in the poorest of soils. It often grows into a very large tree with widely spread branches.

It has a bright red blossom, which appears near the end of December and lasts for several months. For that reason, it is known as the New Zealand Christmas Tree. The Maori believe that the pohutukawa blossom predicts whether the coming summer will be long and hot, or shorter and cooler.

KOWHAI PORCELAIN DIPPING BOWLS

Commonly known as "Tea Tree". Found abundantly throughout both the North and South Islands, Manuka is probably the commonest and best known of all New Zealand plants. In flower, Manuka is a most beautiful plant and a stand of the flowering shrub clothing a hillside looks from a distance like snow. The flowers, when freshly opened, are full of nectar and much sought after by the honey-bee.

"In partaking of this rich, dark honey, you are entering into the healing world of Tane - mysterious, regenerative and infinitely powerful". Tane Mahuta is the god of the New Zealand forest and the Manuka plays an important role in his domain and is his special child.

The plant is treasured by the Maori people and has traditionally been used to treat a wide variety of ailments.

PAUA DIPPING BOWLS

To Māori, pāua are recognised taonga, or treasure, esteemed both as kaimoana (seafood) and as a valued resource for traditional and contemporary arts and crafts. Pāua are frequently used to represent the eyes in Māori carvings and traditionally are associated with the stars or whetū, the symbolic eyes of ancestors that gaze down from the night sky.

The pāua is iconic in New Zealand: its black muscular foot is considered a delicacy, and the shell is frequently used in jewellery.

Highly polished New Zealand pāua shells are extremely popular as souvenirs with their striking blue, green, and purple iridescence. Empty shells are often used as ashtrays.

SCALLOP DIPPING BOWLS (Pecten novaezelandiae)

Scallops are endemic to New Zealand. They are found in the North Island, South Island, Stewart Island, and the Chatham Islands. Habitat is found on sand, silt, and mud from low tide level to over 90m. Large populations are found at depths of 10 to 25 m and are completely free-living, mobile and somewhat migratory.

The New Zealand scallops are a large industry and export product of New Zealand. The large white adductor muscle is eaten; sometimes, the orange and white gonad is eaten, as well. Scallops are considered fine food and can be expensive to purchase. Recreational and commercial fishing of this species is allowed at particular times of the year, the scallop season. The size and number of scallops which can be caught are under control of the quota management system. In some areas of suitable habitat, such as Tasman Bay, scallop spat is seeded in an attempt to achieve a sustainable fishery.

OAMARU STONE KORU SCULPTURE

This Oamaru Stone sculpture is carved in one of the traditional Koru designs representing the coiled spring of the emerging fern leaf, symbolising new life, new growth and new beginnings.

Oamaru Stone is known to Geologists as Totara Limestone and was formed some 35 - 40 million years ago. Over millions of years, the soft sediment became lithified (hardened into rock) and was eventually lifted above sea level.

OAMARU STONE KORU BOOKENDS

These are fantastic bookends as the natural weight of the stone is able to support both small and large books. Their proportions also make them very nice sculptural pieces.

C1260 Bookends 23 x 18 x 10cm (the pair) $159.00
in Presentation Box

OAMARU STONE KORU CD ENDS

They are the same height as a CD and will fit into a space designed for storing CDs. (I have also seen them used as door stops!)

C1261 CD Ends 19 x 13 x 10cm (the pair) $ 99.00
